

Tomorrow arrived yesterday.
It's time to get in focus.

QUESTIONS TO ASK IN A VIDEO INTERVIEW

Video interviews, like any interview or meeting are a two-way street. They are about sharing information, asking questions and showing interest.

Whilst you should prepare yourself for the questions that you will be asked, you should also prepare to turn the tables and have a list of questions that you can ask your interviewer.

Having pre-prepared questions can help you make an informed decision on whether an opportunity is right for you, but they can also demonstrate to your interviewer that you are proactive and have a genuine interest in the role. By not asking any questions you are telling the interviewer that you: A Have not listened or B Are not interested. Neither is the message you want to send!

Below you will find some questions to help you prepare, ask only what is particularly relevant to you. Consider how much time you will have at the end of the interview and have 4-6 smart questions ready to go.

EXAMPLE QUESTIONS

- What characteristics would define a great employee in this role?
- If I were to start tomorrow, what would be the top priority on my to-do list?
- What are some of the longer term objectives that you would like to see completed in the next 3, 6 and 12 months?
- How will my success be measured in this role?
- How would you describe the culture of the organisation?
- What would you say are the top two personality traits someone needs to do this job well?
- What are some of the more difficult challenges I could expect to deal with in this role?
- What improvements or changes do you hope I will bring to this position?
- Are there advancement opportunities available for me in this role, if so, within what time frame?
- What is it you like about working here?
- Is there anything that makes you think I might not be the right fit for this job?
- What new technologies, systems or processes are you looking to adopt in the near future?

Finally, we recommend that you take notes and have your questions prepared and ready to ask at an appropriate time. Interviews can be mentally demanding and having this information written out will help you remember to cover off key points.
